An exit of bluster: On the U.S. and the climate change fight

President Donald Trump has fired his howitzers at multilateralism by signing into decree the United States' withdrawal from the 2015 Paris Agreement. This sets records that are in a class of their own. The U.S. is the only country to have withdrawn thrice from a climate agreement — beginning with George W. Bush's withdrawal, in 2001, from the Kyoto Protocol. Mr. Trump, of course, sets a new low by being the only President to withdraw from a climate agreement twice. In the run-up to the decree, there is a pall of gloom in the climate world over what the U.S.'s latest exit might mean, particularly when the globe has finished its first full calendar year above the 1.5° Celsius mark. The U.S. is the second largest emitter of greenhouse gases. By virtue of being the most powerful economy, it has arrogated to itself the mantle of 'global leadership' in addressing climate change.

But now that the leader has had the spottiest track record of keeping to the terms of a significant agreement — one, whose rule book the U.S. played a major role in compiling — perhaps it is time for the rest of the world to reassess America's role in addressing climate change. Under both Republican and Democratic governments, U.S. domestic policy on greenhouse gas emissions has been subservient to business interests. Oil and gas production increased under the Biden administration. The U.S. remains the world's largest crude oil producer, achieving record production in 2023. The country is also the world's largest producer of gas and, in 2022, became the world's largest exporter for liquified natural gas (LNG). Mr. Trump has only committed to add on to this already substantial base. The U.S. is critically short of achieving its target of greenhouse gas emissions. As of 2022, the U.S. has achieved only about one-third of its 2030 emissions reduction target.

In the last weeks of his Presidency, Mr. Biden increased the U.S.'s emission-reduction commitments to 61%-66% of 2005 levels by 2035. This too, calculations suggest, will be insufficient to meet a 1.5° C target. Private capital propping up renewable energy has grown exponentially since Mr. Bush, and is now too substantial for Mr. Trump and his financial backers to ignore. While it will take a year for the exit to be formalised, it is likely that the U.S.'s behind-the-scenes engagement — especially at the next climate meet (COP 30) in Brazil in November 2025 — will continue. The politics of Mr. Trump suggests that he is not averse to running with the hare and hunting with the hounds.

Summary

The passage discusses the United States' withdrawal from the 2015 Paris Agreement under President Donald Trump, marking the third U.S. exit from a climate agreement and highlighting its poor track record in adhering to climate commitments. The U.S., being the second-largest emitter of greenhouse gases and the most powerful economy, has historically claimed global leadership in climate change mitigation but often prioritizes business interests, particularly in the oil and gas sectors. Despite some progress in renewable energy, the U.S. lags significantly in meeting its emissions reduction targets, even under increased commitments from the Biden administration. The passage predicts ongoing U.S. involvement in global climate negotiations despite its official stance, reflecting political contradictions in its approach to climate leadership.

Tone:

The tone of the passage is critical and analytical, emphasizing the U.S.'s inconsistent climate policies, insufficient progress, and prioritization of economic interests over environmental commitments.

Reading Comprehension

Based on the above passage, answer the following questions:

Question 1:
What record does the U.S. hold in the context of climate agreements, as mentioned in the passage?

a) Being the largest emitter of greenhouse gases globally.
b) Being the only country to withdraw from the Paris Agreement twice.
c) Being the only country to withdraw thrice from climate agreements.
d) Setting the highest emission-reduction target among developed nations.
e) None of the above

Question 2:
What does the phrase “running with the hare and hunting with the hounds” suggest about Donald Trump’s climate policy?

a) A balanced approach to addressing climate change and economic growth.
b) Supporting renewable energy publicly while prioritizing fossil fuels privately.
c) Adopting an aggressive stance toward climate agreements.
d) Focusing solely on private capital for renewable energy growth.
e) None of the above

Question 3:
Which of the following best summarizes the role of private capital in renewable energy development in the U.S.?

a) It has grown to a level that even Trump cannot overlook.
b) It has been insignificant in influencing U.S. climate policies.
c) It has completely replaced the need for government action.
d) It is responsible for the U.S.'s record oil and gas production.

Changed dynamics: On India and the Trump administration

The first 48 hours of U.S. President Donald Trump's second term have been proof of the radical shifts he plans over four years, with the overarching theme of putting "America First". While the strengthening of India-U.S. ties during his first term should give those in New Delhi attempting to strategise for this term some comfort, his moves now make it clear that it will be necessary to expect the unexpected as well. The slew of Executive Orders changes U.S. policy on energy, the environment and climate change, trade and global taxes, citizenship routes, health, border control and immigration. But the new administration has shown it is keen to engage India: External Affairs Minister S. Jaishankar, who was invited along with other Quad Foreign Ministers at the inaugural ceremony, was the first Foreign Minister to hold a one-on-one bilateral meeting with new U.S. Secretary of State Marco Rubio.

The readout of their meeting and the Quad Foreign Ministers' joint statement make it clear that the two sides are on the same page on the Indo-Pacific partnership, concerns over Chinese actions, critical and emerging technology cooperation, strategic and defence ties. Yet, some Trump-Rubio pronouncements have set alarm bells ringing, notably on trade, immigration and the cancellation of citizenship by birth. On trade, India has escaped being named in the first round of tariff announcements, but Mr. Trump's comments on a "100% tariff" against all members of the BRICS emerging economies grouping raised the suspense and a possible market reaction. In his first term, he had withdrawn India's GSP status affecting Indian exporters. On immigration, he has announced a "border emergency", authorised a crackdown on illegal and undocumented migrants, and plans to crush the hopes of H-1B visa holders and other Indians working there, by cancelling the automatic path to citizenship for any children born to them in the U.S.

With 7,25,000 undocumented Indians, any action to deport them in large numbers, beginning with about 18,000-20,000 on the Immigration “final list for removal”, will be a major crisis for India. In this context, Mr. Rubio’s statement in talks with Mr. Jaishankar that they must address the “irregular migration” should be taken seriously. So too should Mr. Trump’s pronouncements insisting on investments in the U.S., hiring in the U.S., and the buying of U.S. energy. The new administration’s geopolitical outlook appears to be set on devaluing the multilateral world order, withdrawing from U.S. commitments of support to WHO, the WTO, and the UN, and putting NATO allies on notice. Given the signs, New Delhi must be prepared for a U.S. administration that will not be particularly sensitive to India’s concerns or be a willing partner in India’s growth unless it sees a benefit for itself, and instead chart a more transactional course, while moving to limit the damage from any adverse actions of the Trump era.

Question 4:
How does the passage describe the U.S.'s geopolitical outlook under the Trump administration?

a) Focused on strengthening NATO alliances.
b) Supportive of multilateral organizations like the WHO and WTO.
c) Increasingly transactional and focused on unilateral benefits.
d) Dedicated to fostering international cooperation.
e) None of the above

Question 5:
What strategy does the passage suggest India should adopt in dealing with the Trump administration?

a) Strengthen its ties with other BRICS nations to counter U.S. policies.
b) Focus on reducing dependence on the U.S. for strategic partnerships.
c) Demand greater sensitivity from the U.S. on India's growth concerns.
d) Prepare for a transactional relationship while minimizing adverse impacts.

Today's Descriptive Question:

Original text

A sustainable business, also known as a green business, operates in a way that prioritizes environmental, social, and economic responsibility. It focuses on minimizing negative impacts on the planet while contributing positively to society and maintaining profitability. These businesses adopt practices that conserve resources, reduce waste, and mitigate environmental harm, aiming to meet the needs of the present without compromising future generations' ability to meet their own. Sustainable businesses integrate sustainability into their core operations and decision-making processes. This may include using renewable energy, reducing carbon footprints, adopting circular economy principles like recycling and reusing materials, and sourcing raw materials ethically.

Additionally, they often engage in corporate social responsibility (CSR) initiatives to support community development, promote fair labor practices, and ensure equitable treatment of employees and stakeholders. The benefits of sustainable business practices extend beyond environmental preservation. Companies that embrace sustainability can reduce costs by improving efficiency, enhance their brand reputation, and foster customer loyalty among environmentally conscious consumers. Moreover, investors increasingly prioritize businesses with strong sustainability practices, recognizing their potential for long-term profitability and resilience in a rapidly changing world.

However, transitioning to sustainable practices is not without challenges. High initial costs, resistance to change, and the need for innovation and education often act as barriers. Despite these obstacles, businesses that commit to sustainability not only contribute to a healthier planet but also position themselves as leaders in a competitive and evolving marketplace.

Precis:

A sustainable business prioritizes environmental, social, and economic responsibility, reducing harm while maintaining profitability. These businesses integrate practices like renewable energy, ethical sourcing, and waste reduction into operations and engage in CSR initiatives to support community well-being.

Sustainability enhances efficiency, brand reputation, and customer loyalty, attracting investors seeking resilient, future-oriented companies. Despite challenges like high initial costs and resistance to change, sustainable businesses contribute to a healthier planet while securing a competitive edge in an evolving market.

Rc ans

1.

Ans: c

Explanation:

The passage explicitly states that the U.S. is the only country to have withdrawn thrice from climate agreements, starting with George W. Bush's exit from the Kyoto Protocol and Donald Trump's two withdrawals from climate agreements.

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

a) The U.S. is the second largest emitter, not the largest.
b) Trump is noted for withdrawing from climate agreements twice, but the record is the country withdrawing thrice in total.
d) While Biden set ambitious targets, this is not the record mentioned.

Ans: b

Explanation:

The phrase implies duplicity, reflecting Trump’s willingness to appear engaged with renewable energy efforts while actively promoting fossil fuel production.

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

a) There is no balance suggested in the passage.

c) Aggression is noted toward agreements, but the phrase highlights a dual approach.

d) Trump is not solely focused on private capital for renewables.

3.

Ans: a

Explanation:

The passage notes that private capital in renewable energy has grown significantly since the Bush era, becoming too substantial for Trump and his financial backers to ignore.

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

b) Private capital has played a notable role.

c) It complements, rather than replaces, government action.

d) Oil and gas production is unrelated to private capital in renewables.

4.

Ans: c

Explanation:

The passage mentions the administration's focus on "investments in the U.S., hiring in the U.S., and buying U.S. energy," along with a transactional approach to international relations.

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

a) The passage states NATO allies are "on notice," indicating reduced support.

b) The administration has withdrawn support from multilateral organizations.

d) Cooperation is deprioritized in favor of unilateral benefits.

5.

Ans: d

Explanation:

The passage recommends that India anticipate a U.S. administration less sensitive to India’s concerns and prepare for a transactional approach to mitigate potential adverse effects.

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

a) No specific strategy involving BRICS nations is suggested.
b) India is advised to adapt rather than reduce U.S. reliance entirely.
c) There is no indication the U.S. will accommodate demands for greater sensitivity.
