ANSWER1.Ans: B*Explanation:

Consequently (Cause and Effect category): Incorrect, as it would suggest that the risk led to confidence, which is not the intended logic.

Nevertheless (Contrast category): Correct, as it highlights that despite the lingering risk, the engineers maintained their confidence — showing contrast.

In contrast (Comparison category): Incorrect, as it suggests a direct comparison between two different things, which is not the case here.

Additionally (Addition category): Incorrect, because it implies adding more information, not contrasting two situations.

Moreover (Addition category): Incorrect, as it would imply adding more information rather than showing contrast.

Complete sentence: "Despite implementing several advanced safety measures, the engineers could not entirely eliminate the risk of malfunction; nevertheless, they remained confident in the reliability of the new system."

2.Ans: DExplanation:

Because (Reason category): Incorrect, because it would incorrectly suggest that productivity declined because AI tools were introduced — but actually, the decline happened due to employees struggling, not just the introduction itself.

Nonetheless (Contrast category): Incorrect, because it suggests contrast, but here the situation is cause and effect, not opposition.

In fact (Emphasis category): Incorrect, as it emphasizes or restates rather than showing cause and effect.

As a result (Cause and Effect category): Correct, as it connects the use of AI tools (cause) with the decline in productivity (effect) logically and directly.

Conversely (Contrast category): Incorrect, because it shows opposite ideas, and the sentences here are connected by cause and effect.

Complete sentence: "The team implemented cutting-edge AI tools to streamline workflow; as a result, productivity declined due to employees struggling with the learning curve."

3.Ans: AExplanation:

hence (Cause and Effect category): Correct, as it connects the team's efforts to the successful result, showing cause-effect clearly.

however (Contrast category): Incorrect, because it introduces contrast, whereas the two statements show logical progression.

similarly (Comparison category): Incorrect, because it suggests a parallel situation, not cause and effect.

besides (Addition category): Incorrect, as it suggests adding extra information, not indicating the result of the data gathering.

otherwise (Condition category): Incorrect, as it implies an alternative outcome that isn't appropriate here.

Complete sentence: "The research team spent several months gathering extensive field data in remote regions with challenging weather conditions; hence, their findings led to groundbreaking advancements in environmental conservation strategies."

4.Ans: CExplanation:

Even though (Contrast category): Incorrect, as it introduces contrast, which is not necessary here. Both sentences are aligned in showing improvement.

Albeit (Contrast category): Incorrect, as it shows a concessive contrast, but there is no opposing idea presented between the two sentences.

Similarly (Comparison category): Correct, because it suggests a similarity between the new platform's introduction and the resulting customer satisfaction, linking them as a cause-effect relationship.

Although (Contrast category): Incorrect, as it implies a contrast, but no such contrast is presented in the sentences.

But (Contrast category): Incorrect, as it introduces an opposition, which is unnecessary in this context.

Complete sentence: "The company introduced an innovative customer service platform; similarly, the overall customer satisfaction has improved significantly since its launch."

and (Addition category): Incorrect, because it does not show the contrast between the improvement and the introduction of bugs.

despite (Contrast category): Incorrect, as it would suggest that the bugs were present regardless of the improvements, which is not the intended meaning.

but (Contrast category): Correct, as it highlights the contrast between the improvement in speed and performance and the introduction of bugs, showing a contradictory relationship.

consequently (Cause and Effect category): Incorrect, because it suggests that the bugs were a direct result of the improvements, which is not the case.

Complete sentence: "The software update improved the app's speed and performance, but it introduced several bugs that disrupted its functionality."
