P. It can help us understand how our ancestors lived, and continue to dispute who should take charge, he added.

Q. As his team dug deeper, they found the well-preserved remains in a pit in what appeared to be a meditative posture. Similar remains have been found at only three other sites in India.

R. The ASI noted that unearthing the skeleton was a meticulous and time-consuming task, taking nearly two months to complete.

S. As of now, the state government maintains that the remains fall under the custody of the Archaeological Survey of India (ASI).

T. Mr. Ambekar says the skeleton - found in the town of Vadnagar - is likely to belong to the Solanki period.

U. The Solanki dynasty, also known as the Chaulukya dynasty, ruled over parts of modern-day Gujarat between 940 to 1300 CE.

V. A 1,000 year-old human skeleton buried sitting cross-legged in India is still without a museum to house it because of bureaucratic wrangling, six years after it was unearthed.

W. Despite its importance, government agencies reveal details about the past that are yet unknown of the skeleton.

X. So it is currently kept in a temporary shelter, looked like the top of a human skull to weather conditions.

Y. The skeleton is an extremely valuable find, not just for Vadnagar but for the whole country.

Z. Archaeologist Abhijit Ambekar made the significant discovery in 2019, when he spotted what guarded by security personnel but still vulnerable while excavating in western Gujarat state.

P. It can help us understand how our ancestors lived, and continue to dispute who should take charge, he added.
